DESIGNING SECURE SPACES WITH MENTAL HEALTH IN MIND

By Rafael González-Palencia, Digital Editor, dormakaba

As seen on dormakaba

For decades, the primary focus of security in building design has been physical protection. From sturdy locks to advanced surveillance systems, these measures aim to deter crime and keep occupants safe. However, a growing body of research suggests that there's a powerful link between architecture and mental health, and in particular, the positive contribution of secure spaces to the latter.
